ANOTHER LIFE WORLD AT LARGE cummers in my life. One was 'Hey, Mulligan' that I did about seven years ago, and one was called 'Mickey' for ABC. I begged them not to do that one.

"I said 'Don't blow me out of the tubes,' but they did it anyway. I had two chances: slim and none.

"As for 'Hey, Mulligan,' I did that when my career was at a very low point. Since I'm neither Gregory Peck nor Billy Barty, nobody knew what to do with me. I was losing my hair and was losing my appeal at the box office.

"Anyway, 'Hey, Mulligan' was put on opposite Jackie Gleason, so I had two chances again, and you know what they were.

"Since then, I've done some interesting things on television, I believe. I've been nominated four times for an Emmy for dramatic work.

And, as star of "Sugar Babies," Rooney has become one of Broadway's hottest attractions.
"So now," he says, "I can pick and choose.

"I'm probably the most hypercritical person in the world of Mickey Rooney," he continues. "I always talk about him as the third person. I know when he stinks; I know when he's fair; I know when he's good.

"But I've always been at the mercy of other people, having to do what they wanted me to do.

"So I was very happy when 'One of the Boys' was presented to me, because it had all of the ingredients that I, as a viewer, would want to see.

"It has the qualities of the Andy Hardy pictures. It has the frivolity of 'Sanford and Son' and, I think, all the things that make a good, solid show.'

While admitting, "You can't please everybody," Mickey says that during his 59 years in show business, he's never had a better crack at a successful television series than he's getting now.

"I really believe 'One of the Boys' is a show every-body can be proud of," Roosays, still selling. you'll take the time to watch

He loves watching television, he confesses.

"I like to be entertained just like anybody else. I used to watch 'Bonanza' trying to figure out who those four big men were who didn't go with girls.

"The public loved those characters, and one of them finally spun off into 'Little House on the Prairie' which is magnificent.

"Part of 'Bonanza's' success was its timing, because at that time America needed people like the Cartwrights to love. And I think timing is going to work for 'One of the

The show is pro-American without waving the flag. It doesn't take cheap shots or insult your intelligence.

Mickey's domestic life has been as erratic as his professional one, and he mentions this freely.

He speaks, tongue-in-cheek, of "Mickey Rooney and His All-Wife Band."

Garner denies he's too old to con

By ALAN L. GANSBERG

HOLLYWOOD - JAMES GARNER is back in the saddle as "Bret Maverick" the character he played in 1957-59 — and protests any assumptions that he is too old to play the popular western con man.
"Too old?" he mused.

"Most con men are old.

"Besides, our scripts are right and I have a nice supporting cast with me this time around. We've found the same flair."

Garner scoffed at rumors that he's in ill health, although production on the NBC series was halted while his ribs healed in September. He shrugged and said,

"The scandal magazines say I'm about to take my last breath. That's news to me."

Files" and his current series, Garner made a few motion pictures, one of which — "Health" — has yet to be released. This annoys him, since he thinks the film — which also stars CAROL BURNETT and LAUREN BACALL among others - is quite good.

"'Health' is a good pic-ture," he said. "The studio won't release it because they have a personal vendetta against ROBERT ALTMAN, the director. The studio wants to see the film fail."

ROBERT CONRAD, who got his big break in show business about the same time as Garner, refuses to go back to series, but has come up with a contemporary TV movie idea and sold it to NBC.

Bob will portray an air traffic controller who loses his job while the film explores the effects the strike has had on the families of the workers. He'll also produce the film. CBS is planning to do a TV movie on the life of BETTY GRABLE. No casting has been announced yet. Grable was famous as the pinup girl of World War II. Her legs were insured for $1 million.

FRED SAXON, film critic for the Cable News Network, made a big hit in Hollywood when he produced a "getwhen he produced a "get-well card to HENRY FONDA." While covering the premier of "On Golden Pond" with his camera crew, Saxon had the celebrities present say a few words for 'Hank" into the camera. He then edited the result' and sent it to Fonda, who was in the hospital at the time.

Although she still suffers from the effects of her stroke of several years ago, ELLEN CORBY will remain active. Best known as the grandmother on "The Waltons," Corby is set to do two "Waltons" specials this sea-son and also the live theater presentation of "All The Way Home.'

DANNY DE VITO plays a less than lovable character on "Taxi," so he's interested in playing one in a movie. De Vito has agreed to play Fiorello La Guardia, former mayor of New York City, in a TV movie that will trace the man's life up to the time he became mayor.
